In the fall of 1953, a central research laboratory for uranium ore was located at Praha-Hodkovičky. The laboratory, which was probably erected in the spring of 1953, was located on the east side of the Modřany-Branik railroad line, on a side street which extended to the west from Modřanská street to the railroad line. The research laboratory was located on a site near a [REDACTED] fence about 2.5 miles [REDACTED] was located at one gate. From the street, a three-story [REDACTED] building which had been newly erected could be seen. [REDACTED] work was going on behind these two buildings. An estimated [REDACTED] research laboratory at the end of working time. Detailed information on the activities going on in the laboratory was not available. It was learned that the former "U černého koně" restaurant near the bus stop at the intersection of Modřanská and V Morinách streets was confirmed for the central research laboratory for ore.
